12 AUGUST 2022 BOOK WORK 5: I know that I am finally recovering from this last bout of illness.

Fifteen minutes after I woke up this morning, I figured out what was wrong with the Apache server and fixed it.

The Pelican blog server is up and running on my Mac, rsync updates the r Pi's web content across the network perfectly, and the website loads quickly to the outside. All I need is a vanity domain name, illustrations of the female romantic lead, and I'm ready to go!

As far as my latest bout of Multi-Irons Syndrome is concerned, I have decided to blog weekly still, and I am committed to finishing the fantasy book I'm co-authoring with an associate. That's what the second website is for.

Of course, this was only a test case. I still need to migrate cootey.com to my r Pi, then tackle the remaining blog issue.

What blog issue?

What platform do I want to use instead of Blogger.com? Can Pelican handle the Blogger.com naming conventions? Do I still want to blog about mental health? Can I seriously blog weekly about ADHD and depression at The Splintered Mind while working on a book based on my blog writings while also writing two fantasy novels?

No. Not likely. Something has got to go. I don't want to give up blogging, though. I enjoy it too much; I feel grounded when I blog; and I know that I have more people that I can help.

I have family that are ashamed of my blogging. They're either embarrassed for me or of me. They and others are convinced that blogging is a waste of my time. None of them spend any significant time with me, yet they all - ALL - think they know what's best for me. They never ask why I blog.

I guess that settles the matter of content. I want to continue helping people thru my writing, and so I shall continue honing my craft to that end.